Weather

Delhi:-The climate in New Delhi is categorized as tropical, due to its constant high temperatures throughout the year. However, between April and September in New Delhi, the weather quickly changes and endless sunshine results in high day temperature reaching more than 35°C, often around 40°C. The winter season persists from October to February and March, when the climate is at its more favorable. At this time of the year, you can expect plenty of sunny weather, Even during January, New Delhi's coldest month, you can still expect daytime temperatures to exceed 20°C, although the nights can be quite chilly, with cold fronts arriving from the Himalayas.

Jaipur:- Weather of Jaipur can be termed as warm, being situated in the desert area. In winters, the city of Jaipur observes bright and pleasant sunny days, though the temperature can reach a low of around 05°C during the nights. The summer season persists from Mid-March to June reaching to the maximum temperature of 45° C.

Agra :- The climate of Agra is extreme and tropical. Summers are extremely hot and the maximum temperature can be as high as 45°C. However, even in the winter, the climate remains rather tropical. The average winter day is around 30°C.
